

No one should have the right to use another's intellectual or physical property without express permission of the owner. That is why we have copyright law - to protect intellectual property. It is NOT the copyright holders responsibility to insure a plagiarist give credit or pay for usage. Frequently ownership information is conveniently omitted for such purposes. If an owner doesn't know his/her work has been stolen there is no way to protect that work. If it passes the age test, then let material be used. Otherwise copyright protection is necessary regardless of who misses out on some interesting information. Oh yes...a thief is a thief and don't you forget it. Thanks. mhbarnden
