

Broberg-Ronald-20050314083049

To: Julie L. Sigall
Associate Register for Policy & International Affairs

Date: 03/14/2005

From: Ronald Broberg

Comment:

Copyright law originated to benefit the public by creating incentives for authors and publishers to create works and disseminate them widely. It works against this intent to allow works to be made unavailable simply because a copyright holder cannot be found. Such a result would benefit no one and potentially harm those who could benefit from use of the work today - how could such an outcome be just?