About a year or so ago, I was attempting to create a logo for my school's honors program, and found a very evocative piece of artwork and based a potential logo around it. I immediately tried to contact the copyright holder through the message system on the website where I found the work, but the deadline approached nearer and nearer and the original artist never checked his inbox on that particular site. The site statistics said he hadn't even visited the site in two months, and no other contact information was provided. The deadline passed and my school could not accept any submissions which had outstanding copyright issues, so my entry was disqualified and now only sits unviewed (except maybe by me from time to time) in a file on my hard drive.
